Carbiotix files for bankruptcy

The Board of Directors of Carbiotix ("Carbiotix" or the "Company") has filed for bankruptcy on behalf of the Company. The application for bankruptcy was submitted to Lund District Court.

The decision is based on a thorough assessment of alternatives, and considering the current financial situation, the Board of Directors has reached the overall conclusion that the Company does not have enough financing to fulfil outstanding obligations and continue its operations.

The Company delisted from the Spotlight Stock Market in December of 2025 and has financed its operations through convertible loans and a direct rights issue in February of 2026. The Company was unable to secure further private or venture financing to support its working capital and planned CAPEX requirements after extensive attempts to find both a short- and longer-term financing solution. The reason for this can mainly be attributed to a combination of two factors: 1) a more challenging and demanding investment climate in the food-tech upcycling area, and 2) the recent and potentially escalating military activities in the Middle East, and the proximity of the Company's first planned full-scale production site to be located in Dubai.

Considering the above, the board of directors of Carbiotix has filed for bankruptcy at Lund District Court.

Carbiotix sincerely regrets the inability of the Company to pursue its continued technology and business development activities based on NutraCycle, its innovative onsite upcycling service allowing food & beverage companies to become circular ingredient manufacturers.

With regards to next steps:

- All normal operations will be suspended effective immediately.
- Carbiotix will work closely with the appointed bankruptcy trustee to ensure an orderly process.
- Stakeholders will be informed of developments as they occur.

Carbiotix extends its gratitude to employees, customers, partners, and shareholders for their support and commitment throughout the Company's journey.
